Target Audience and Ad Opportunities

High school journalism educators, from the newest to the most experienced, make up the majority of the 2,500+ members of the national Journalism Education Association. A secondary audience of JEA members includes professionals — college librarians (more than 200 library subscriptions), yearbook printing companies, college journalism education leaders, and state and regional association directors.

Print and Online Directory

Communication: Journalism Education Today promotes lifelong professional learning as the norm and as the expectation for all journalism teachers/advisers. The quarterly JEA magazine, C:JET presents articles and packages about reporting, writing, editing, photography, design, typography, trends, advertising, fundraising, public relations and ethical standards as well as articles and packages about technology and pedagogy pertinent for journalism educators. Editors seek articles that value originality, thorough research, knowledgeable sources, fact checking and Associated Press style — all in ways that speak to journalism advisers.
